

Google Safe Search Filter

Setting your Google Safe Filter is a very simple process. Go to your Internet Explorer and type in the address window: www.Google.com just as you would with any Google search. Once you get to this window, you will notice to the right of the entering space there is an option called “preferences.” If you click on that it takes you to a new screen. Scroll to the bottom of the screen to the safe searching filter option and it’s defaulted to use moderate filtering, but if you click right above that to use strict filtering – scroll down to “Save Preferences,” click okay and from now on it will filter out at a stricter level. It’s as simple as that.

If you want to change it back. Do the same thing, scroll down and go back to the moderate filtering. This can be altered as often as you want and you may want to just attempt a few searches to make sure it’s filtering everything you need it to so you know exactly what else you might want to take as far as precautionary measures.
