Online registration is now available for this conference at marc-conference.org/2009.

Conference sessions will address the most important regulatory issues facing the country and feature a wide variety of renowned energy and utility experts related to the electricity, natural gas, telecommunications and water industries. The conference represents a valuable learning opportunity, as well as a chance to exchange knowledge with other utility experts.

MARC President Monica Martinez, a commissioner with the Michigan Public Service Commission, encourages people to attend. "The conference brings exciting presentations that will focus on topics and discussions that will move the region and country to a 'greener' economy," she said. "The MARC speakers will bring their expertise about the economic challenges facing our country and the technologies of today and tomorrow that can move us closer to energy independence."

MARC was formed in 1956 to represent the interests of state agencies and establish a dialogue that focuses on effective regulatory practices. The states representing MARC include: Arkansas, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Ohio, Oklahoma, North Dakota, South Dakota, Texas and Wisconsin.
