Expand Your Knowledge and Skill

Agriculture is commonly referenced as Michigan's second largest industry. This is reinforced by the fact that agriculture is currently the only growth industry in Michigan. And both of these points underscore the need for emergency response professionals and volunteers alike to be ready for encounters with horses and livestock in the course of their work.

This is a one day workshop for Michigan first responders, animal control officers and other interested animal volunteers. The goal of the workshop is to help you to develop or reinforce skills and response capabilities used when dealing with cattle, horses and other domestic livestock during emergencies or other response situations.

This workshop will provide a hands-on experience with typical Michigan farm animal species, coupled with informative and timely presentations from respected professionals and specialists from Michigan State University and across Michigan.
