Governor Rick Snyder tells a business conference on Mackinac Island that training and getting people interested in skilled trades is his top economic development priority.

Thousands of employers – including some of the state’s largest – attend the annual Detroit Regional Chamber event. The state’s new Talent Investment Agency says many of those employers complain Michigan has a “skills gap” in its workforce.

Governor Snyder says there are 8,300 of jobs as welders, electricians, computer drafters, and other skilled trades available right now, with thousands of new positions opening up

“My children can once again look out the windows and enjoy our house.”

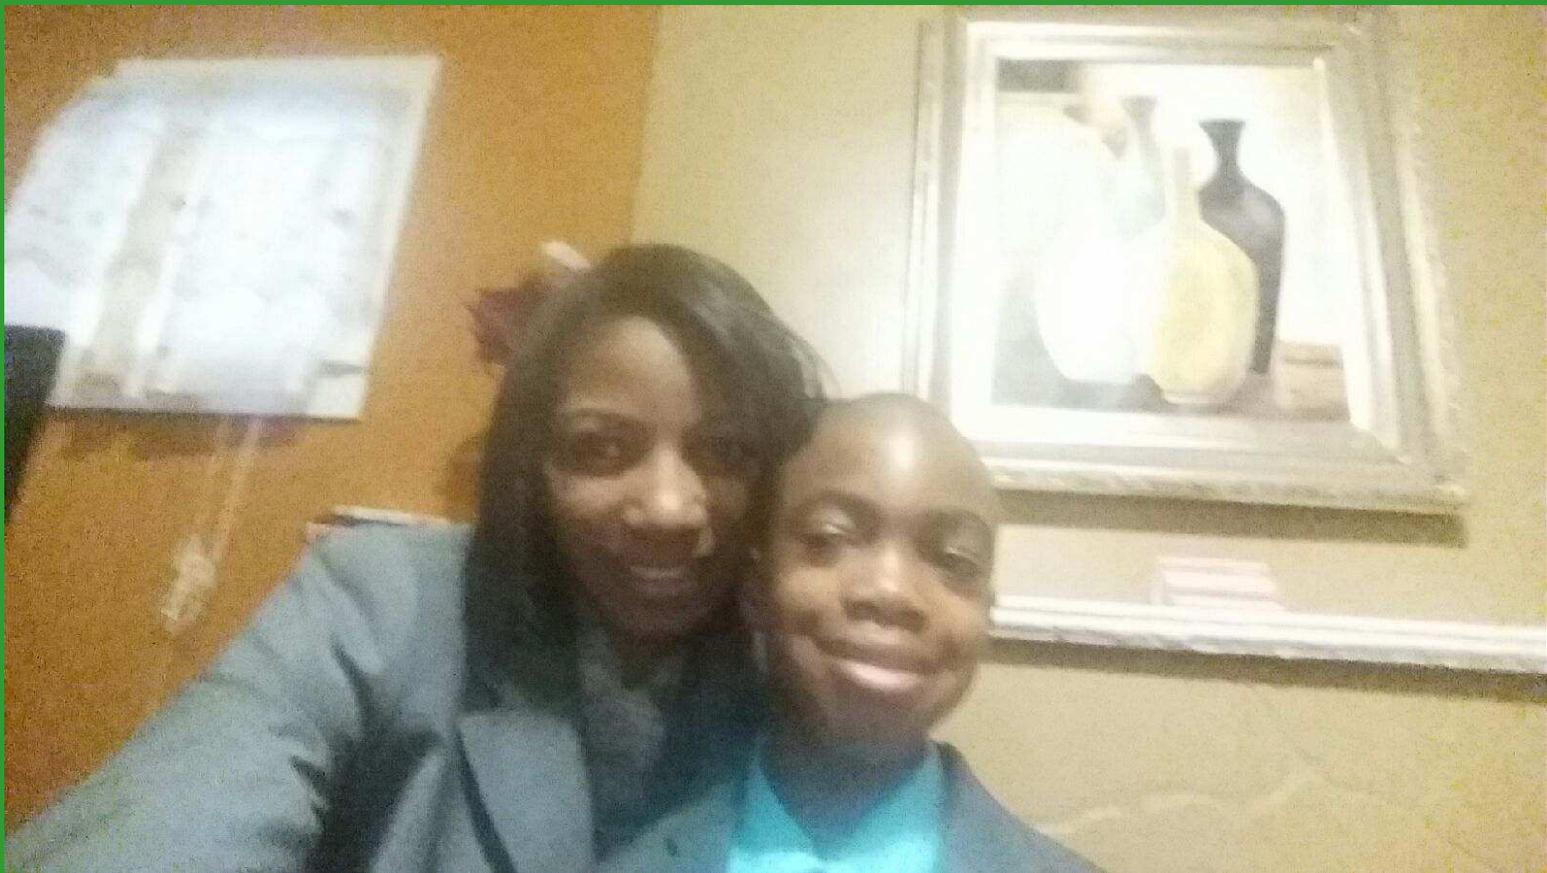

Laingsburg, Michigan

“The biggest thing I have learned, lead poisoning can happen to anybody, even if you are knowledgeable.”

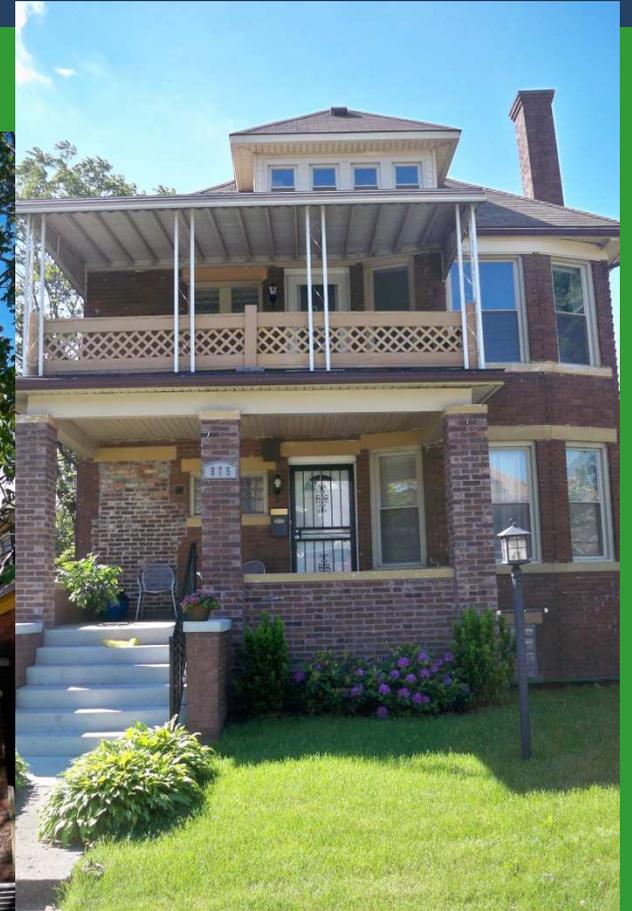

Detroit, Michigan

“I would not have been able to do the needed improvements on my own.”

Detroit, Michigan

“It feels good to allow him [my son son] to go down in our basement and not feel threatened by the potential lead that was present.”

Thank you, Lead
