Under the guidance of MDHHS, two implementing Agencies – Michigan State University Extension (MSU Extension) and Michigan Fitness Foundation (MFF) - will deliver SNAP-Ed programming to 797,000 people in more than 5,000 sites, including schools, community centers, worksites, faith organizations, farmers markets, grocery and corner stores, community gardens, health care sites, and emergency food distribution sites. SNAP-Ed programs and projects reach Michigan's most vulnerable residents in all 83 counties.

Michigan State University Extension

MSU Extension provides ongoing staff training, uses evidence-based and practice-tested curricula and Policy, Systems, Environment (PSE) strategies, and collects data using validated evaluation instruments. This type of structured and consistent protocol and reporting brings to life the knowledge, skills, and changes to policies, systems and environments that participants gain through the MSU Extension SNAP-Ed program.

Michigan Fitness Foundation

MFF's SNAP-Ed grantees for FY 2018 were selected through a competitive request for proposal (RFP) process. Forty-three proposals were submitted to deliver SNAP-Ed programming that promotes increased fruit and vegetable consumption and physical activity through direct education and PSE changes that meet the needs of SNAP eligible participants. The proposals went through an objective review process that included external content-expert reviewers. Of the proposals submitted, 35 were selected for funding. Funding decisions for SNAP-Ed grantees are made on a year by year basis.
