How do we learn about our past when we have no books, photographs or other information available? Archaeology! Do you know a curious child who is interested in science, engineering, technology or math? Through daily quests and hands-on activities, Dig Camp helps youth ages 8 to 10 and 11 to 13 use all of these to reveal our human past. Participants will discover new and exciting ways to explore the world around and under them. They will find out what archaeologists can learn from an animal bone, a broken plate or a change in the color of the soil.
