

ART IN MOTION : an animation workshop

Have you ever wanted to add a new dimension to your own art? Or sought to bring an exciting multi-disciplinary art form into your classroom? Art in Motion is a new workshop presented by Detroit Area Film & Television designed to provide an intensive hands-on experience in animation for classroom teachers and other interested adults. The instructors have many years of classroom and professional experience in animation and promise a week full of learning and fun.

Vic Spicer is an animated animator, commercial producer and musician. He has been a resident artist in numerous classrooms and workshops across the state.

John Prusak is an award-winning cinematographer and resident artist who has taught video and animation for over 30 years. John currently teaches at Wayne State University.

Annette Alexander-Frank is an award-winning art teacher and arts advocate who has coordinated media workshops for students and teachers for 25 years.

Julie Youngblood is a sculptor and art teacher with a BA in film and experience in both animation and commercial video productions.

WHAT IT'S ABOUT:

This course will provide an opportunity to try a variety of different kinds of animation including cell, cut-outs, drawing under the camera, object animation, pixilation and claymation. Other aspects of animation production such as storyboarding, editing, adding sound, and (for teachers) classroom applications will be covered according to group interest.

WHEN and WHERE:

Art in Motion will meet August 1- 5, 2005. Classes meet daily Monday through Thursday from 9am to 5pm and Friday until 3 pm at the beautiful Howell Nature Center, a camp and educational facility midway between Lansing and Detroit.

FEES:

The tuition for Art in Motion is $585, which includes most materials, lunch, and a compilation tape of all work produced. University credit (3 hours) is offered through Central Michigan University for an additional fee paid to CMU. Overnight accommodations in dorms are available for an additional $100, which includes breakfast (dinner is on your own).
