SUMMARY

At the request of the appointing authority and within the limits described herein, the state will pay for the movement of household goods and the movement of mobile homes for current state employees transferred to a new work location for the convenience and benefit of the state.

This does not include moving expenses of employees not previously on the state payroll. The agency director or their designee may authorize exceptions to the general prohibition against paying moving expenses of employees on initial hire or rehire when it is determined that doing so is in the best interests of the state.

If the distance from the employee's present residence to the new official work station is 50 miles farther than to the old official work station, the move qualifies for reimbursement by the state.

The limits described herein do not affect, expand, or lessen terms and conditions of employment under collective bargaining agreements.

Employee reimbursements are subject to tax reporting and withholding.
