In Honor of The Charleston 9:

A Study of Change Following Tragedy

On June 18, 2007, nine firefighters perished in a furniture warehouse fire in Charleston, South Carolina. The engineer of the first-arriving engine, David, relates how this experience has changed education and training on a national level. David gives a riveting account of what he witnessed that day, and the crisis that ensued in the fire service and his personal life as well.

Also included in this powerful program is David's doctoral research on organizational crisis and how an organization can utilize organizational learning to improve upon crisis. Attendees will share in not only the pain of this occurrence, but also the triumph reflected in changes in numerous aspects of organizational culture. This program has been presented to over 200 organizations internationally, including private industry, public service, for profit, and non-profit organizations. While this is a course regarding a fire service event, it is relatable to all organizations.

The Art of Go/No Go!

The toughest and most critical decisions you make in your career typically revolve around committing to an interior attack or choosing another route. Seasoned officers know the difference between "We can get it" and "It's lost." You should, too...

Utilizing a simple framework that allows you build on your experiences and those of others, you can develop an intuitive approach that grows with you throughout your career. This is not a magic class. No one becomes a great decision maker by attending a few classes and watching a few videos. The goal is to create a framework of four varying profiles: Rescue, Fire, Building and Tactical. These profiles allow you to keep focused on your decisions and give you the ability to draw on what you've learned and react to changes in the dynamic fire environment.

Students will leave with tools to drill their troops and continue to grow in their ability to make great decisions. The course provides an intuitive learning model that expands as you use it and gain more experience. For those with limited fireground experience, it will help to jump start your knowledge base and give you a framework to evaluate more effectively right from the start. Experienced firefighters will find a better method of recognizing what you know, putting it together with new information and making better decisions even when all the information isn't clear.
