Three ways to enhance your health care experience

The more you know about your health, the more power you have to make the best decisions for you and your family. To do that, it's important to develop a dashboard of your health care status. From your coverage to your checkups to your conditions, every component is crucial to keep you rolling in good health.

Are you looking to get more of a grip on your health care? Get a jump start by doing these three things:

➤ Register your account on bcbsm.com.

Whether you're constantly on the go, or a homebody at heart – establishing an online account could save you a phone call to Customer Service. You'll have access to our Find a Doctor search and other mobile tools, whenever you need them. Check out the Experience the ease of anytime article (Page 2) to find the steps to register.

➤ If you don't have a regular doctor, get one. Using the Find a Doctor search, you can filter the search results by distance, hospital affiliation, gender and specialty — and even read member-written reviews (where available) about the doctors.

Tip: Try to start your search when you're not under the weather. That way, your search isn't as urgent and you can take time to really research each doctor you're considering. The rest is easy — call the doctor's office and make that appointment.

➤ See your doctor every year for a checkup. A yearly physical exam gives you an opportunity to know your vital numbers, get routine blood work done and talk through any of your health concerns — all of which are a huge part of your health status dashboard. The first step in stopping chronic conditions before they start is identifying signs and symptoms — and the earlier, the better.

Connecting with your new doctor

Small but solid steps

Although communication is a two-way street, playing an active role in creating that connection can help pave the way.

Here are a few steps you can take:

Prepare. Many doctors ask their patients for questions and concerns before meeting with them. Having a list can help you make the best use of the time you have with your doctor.

Prioritize. When it's time to see the doctor, make sure that your most pressing health issues are at the top of that list of things to discuss during the visit.

Plug in. Taking advantage of your communication options like email, text messages or relaying issues through a staff nurse helps to build a strong connection to your doctor and his or her staff. Plus, it gives you the opportunity to address secondary concerns and could save you a trip to the doctor.

Need to talk to a registered nurse?

Call our 24-Hour Nurse Line

You never know when symptoms will strike. It could be 3 a.m. and you're running a low-grade fever. Or your child wakes up in the middle of the night with an earache. What do you do?

Since most doctors' offices and urgent care centers are closed and you're not experiencing a life-threatening condition, you can talk to a registered nurse for free by calling the 24-Hour Nurse Line.

Available when you need it

24 hours a day, seven days a week, registered nurses are available to discuss your symptoms to determine the appropriate level of care and if any medical follow-up is needed. The nurse can also tell you if your situation is more serious and if you should head to the emergency room.

Health information

Registered nurses are available to answer your health care questions, whether they're simple or complex. Rather than waiting hours to receive care for minor symptoms at the emergency room, you can talk to a registered nurse for free wherever you are. Our nurses are determined to help you make the most informed decisions about your health.
