

CPR/First Aid Training Resources

Licensing rules require that at least one adult member of the household shall have training in and maintain a current certification in first aid and cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) from the American Heart Association or the American Red Cross or other institution approved by the department.

DCWL has approved these on-line sources for obtaining the required certification in first aid/CPR training:

Agencies may also seek opportunities to have a staff person trained as First Aid Instructors; agencies who choose to use a trained staff person will need to verify that the training gives the staff person the ability to certify others in first aid. See <https://www.redcross.org/take-a-class/first-aid> for options.

Certification from other in-person training organizations may also be acceptable if they meet American Heart Association or American Red Cross guidelines and provide a certification card.

If you are unsure if an on-line and or in person CPR/First Aid source is acceptable, please check with your DCWL consultant.
