In 2012, Michigan had 1 police officer killed in the line of duty. Here is his story.

Officer Patrick O'Rourke was shot and killed while making entry into a home on Forest Edge Lane in West Bloomfield after responding to a domestic dispute and reports of shots fired from inside the house. Officer O'Rourke's shift had just ended when the call was sent out. He joined the other officers to assist. He and four other officers responded shortly after 10:00 p.m. Several family members, who had been in the home, had exited it prior to the arrival of the officers and informed them that the man inside may have committed suicide.

The officers entered the home and made their way to a bedroom. Before entering the bedroom they called out the subject's name but were met with gunfire through the bedroom door. Officer O'Rourke was struck by the gunfire and critically wounded. He was transported to the McLaren Hospital where he succumbed to his wounds. The subject was found dead in the home the following evening after an entry by members of the Special Response Team.

Officer O'Rourke had served with the West Bloomfield Police Department for 12 years. End of Watch: Sunday, September 9, 2012.
