Possible examples include but are not limited to the following (all examples assume the HSE candidate can pass the HSE Test):

1. An individual becomes the head of a household or otherwise needs to secure employment to support the family.
2. A female is pregnant or has a child and will not be returning to regular school.

4. An individual with exceptional academic skills is seeking to be admitted to a college or university but does not have a high school diploma.
5. An individual has been expelled from school and will not be able to return to graduate with his/her class.
6. An individual has been disruptive in the community and/or has had problems with law enforcement, and court officials such as a judge or probation officer, or a school psychologist, or a social worker recommend HSE testing as being in the best interest of the individual.
7. An individual who has exhausted all other options, has earned a minimum number of high school credits and cannot possibly earn enough academic credit or graduate with his/her class and wishes to move on to employment, job training opportunities, or college.
8. An individual who is unable to stay in regular school, and with the support and agreement of his/her family and school principal, it is determined that it is in the best interest of the student to obtain their HSE to continue with employment, job training, or be admitted to a college or university.
