

INTRODUCTION

What is incident based reporting?

Incident based reporting views a crime and all of its components as an “incident.” Incidents are organized into specific categories, segments, and data elements in order to obtain important information and recorded facts. These data elements provide information about crime and its involvement with victims, offenders, property, arrestees, and the relationships between the victims and offenders.

What is MICR?

MICR (Michigan Incident Crime Reporting) is Michigan’s version of the National Incident Based Reporting System. The MICR system was established and first certified by the FBI in 1994 and became the state’s only method of reporting crime for all law enforcement agencies in 2005. The NIBRS system captures a standard set of offenses. Each certified state must capture these standard offenses to allow a compilation of crime counts in the United States. MICR captures additional crimes as enacted into law by the Michigan legislature.

The most significant difference between the FBI’s Uniform Crime Reporting (UCR) system and MICR is the degree of detail in reporting. MICR collects information on 95 file classes compared to the UCR Summary reporting system that only collects 8 serious (Part 1 or Index) offenses and 18 less serious offenses. The FBI summary system applies a hierarchal rule which means that it only accepts information on the most serious offense in an incident reporting multiple crimes, with the exception of Arson. Because of the differences between UCR summary data and MICR data, any cross comparisons would provide inaccurate results in trend analysis.
